Gardner & Adams Co. Kearns Building Miss Joy DeCamp has gone to San Francisco after a visit with Mrs. J. B. Clark and at the country home of the Fabians at Entwood.

A large number of parties have been formed for the week end in Brighton and will leave this morning for the resort, returning Monday.

Mrs. George T. Odell and Mrs. Joseph Richards are at the Odell cottage at Brighton.

MARGARET ANGLIN

The deterioration of Margaret Anglin was something appalling to her old friends who sat through "Beverly's Balance," Paul Kester's catchpenny used in the jumps between the east and Berkeley, where Miss Anglin is scheduled to exploit one or two of the Greek dramas. In a play founded on a clever idea, badly carried out and with an impossible company, Miss Anglin, devoid of the old charm, with an exaggerated lisp, an articulation which needed an interpreter and without any of the appealing attributes that used to make her such a favorite; in appearance, voice and work shocked and grieved those who were quite sure in her earlier years that she was to be one of the great actresses. The transfromation is almost unbelievable and pitiful to note. What has happened to this once wonderful woman is one of those mysteries of rather frequent occurrence in stageland.

The next attraction at the theatre scheduled at present is Mrs. Pat Campbell in "Pygmalion" and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." Her engage: ment will open August 30th.

IN A HASTINGS HOSPITAL

A Story of the War Told to the Writer.

By Stephen Phillips.

They wrote: "Your sweetheart in this ward Lies wounded; at all hours Asking to see your face again." She flew to him with flowers.

Swiftly she came beside his bed, Softly beside him set Bunches of primrose and daffodil And sweeter violet.

And these she held for him to smell, Fresh from their English bank, While still the soldier backward lay And of their sweetness drank.

Faintly he told of his many fights, Of being left for dead; She, like a sister, laid her hand Over the bandaged head.

"Enough," they told her; she must go. Yes, she would come again, But longer now to stay would bring A fever to the brain.

But ere she went she said to him: "This primrose take from me; It is so light, it is so bright, And restful it will be."

The man was troubled sore; his eyes Looked from the linen bands, And gently then he answered her: "Dear, but I have no hands."

A moment on his words she thought In doubt beside the door; Then on a sudden understood, And swooned upon the floor.

Hamilton's Smart Shop

Our advantageous sale of suits and coats and other bargains is almost over, but there still remain a few specially priced articles in the remainder of our summer assortments.

There are six weeks more of hot weather you know, and there is scarcely a wardrobe that does not need replenishing. There are few who do not need some simple additions to their wardrobes to round out the summer season. The Smart Shop is the place to find them.
